AT THE LUTON HOO WALLED GARDEN

THE HISTORY

This stunning six-acre octagonal walled garden is set within the grounds of Luton Hoo Estate; the garden was established in the 1770s by John Stuart, 3rd Earl of Bute, friend and advisor to George III and consultant in the planning of Kew Gardens.

“Capability” Brown designed the walls and for nearly two centuries the walled garden was both a botanical garden and the production centre for the Estate's fruit, vegetable and cut flower needs. The walled garden is now home to The Conservatory and is being developed to reflect the traditional use including the reintroduction of the plants, flowers, vegetables and fruit trees originally grown there in the eighteenth and nineteenth Centuries.

Proceeds from our venue hire, are pumped back into The Walled Garden Refurbishment project.
