The wines of Portugal are a many splendid thing and we have assembled a succinct list of the wines that well represent their regions and varieties. We support smaller more interesting producers that focus on low interference in the winery and let terroir, vintage and varietal character shine through in their wines. We are also proud to have some wines from the volcanic island archipelago of the Azores. These wines are very rare and extremely fine.

PORT

Port is made from grapes grown on the high, steep terraces of the Douro Valley. The wines fortified then matured in cellars in Vila Nova de Gaia, where the river flows into the Atlantic. Vintage port spends around two years in barrel, before maturing often for decades in bottle. These wines are powerful and dark; a great match for cheese and chocolate, or indeed on their own. Tawny ports by contrast spend their whole life in barrel until the point of release. The wines are lighter in style and colour often with notes of raisins, coffee and spice and tremendously versatile, suitable for almost all kinds of dessert, and of course cheese.

MADEIRA

GLASS
70ML

Developed in the 15th century, the Atlantic island of Madeira lay on the trade routes between Europe and the Americas and became a valuable refuelling point. The wines were fortified with neutral spirit for stability during the voyage, during which they developed a unique character from exposure to heat. This translated into the style associated with these wines today. The wines are capable of ageing for well over a century and come in range of styles. Sercial are the driest followed by Verdelho, Boal then Malvasia. The sweetness is always balanced by fresh, tangy acidity. These special wines can be enjoyed on their own at any time, or with a range of desserts and savouries at the end of the meal.
