France vs Argentina! French Viognier, primarily grown in the Rhône Valley, is celebrated for its lush aromas of peach, apricot, and floral notes. In contrast, the Argentine version tends to be bolder and fruitier, with bright notes of tropical fruits like pineapple and mango, often rounded out by a refreshing acidity. French Malbec, primarily grown in the Cahors region, is often characterized by its earthy and rustic qualities, while Argentinian Malbec has gained international acclaim for its plush, fruit-forward profile, featuring notes of blackberry, plum, and chocolate, often softened by a velvety mouthfeel.
