SASSICAIA

In the 1920s, the Marchese Mario Incisa della Rocchetta dreamt of creating a 'thoroughbred' wine for him, and his aristocratic friends, the ideal was Bordeaux. In the 1940s, having settled on the Tenuta San Guido on the Tyrrhenian coast, he experimented with several French grape varieties and concluded that the Cabernet had "the bouquet I was looking for." This was a fundamental change to the Tuscan and Piedmont tradition of Sangiovese and Nebbiolo respectively, and the first vintages were not warmly received. Thus from 1948 to 1967, Sassicaia remained a strictly private affair, only to be consumed at Tenuta San Guido. Each year, a few cases were stored to age in the Castiglioncello di Bolgheri cellar. The Marchese soon realized that by ageing the wine it improved considerably. Friends and relatives now urged Mario Incisa to experiment further with his project and perfect his revolutionary winemaking style. It was not until 1968 that Sassicaia was first commercially released – the welcome was worthy of a Bordeaux Premier Cru.
