Pinot Gris, Pinot Grigio

Pinot 'G' is grown around the globe with the 'spicy' full-bodied Alsatian, and lighter-bodied, more acidic Italian style being most widely recognised. The Alsatian style, is often duplicated in the New World, Marlborough, Tasmania, Australia; while in Italy, the grapes are often harvested earlier to retain the refreshing acidity, and minimize some of the overt-fruitiness of the variety.

Increasingly wine grapes are harvested at night. It results in better wine and lower energy costs.

Daytime temperatures change the sugar composition of grapes. Picking at night when sugar levels are stable keeps surprises from happening during fermentation.

ROSE

175ml | Bottle

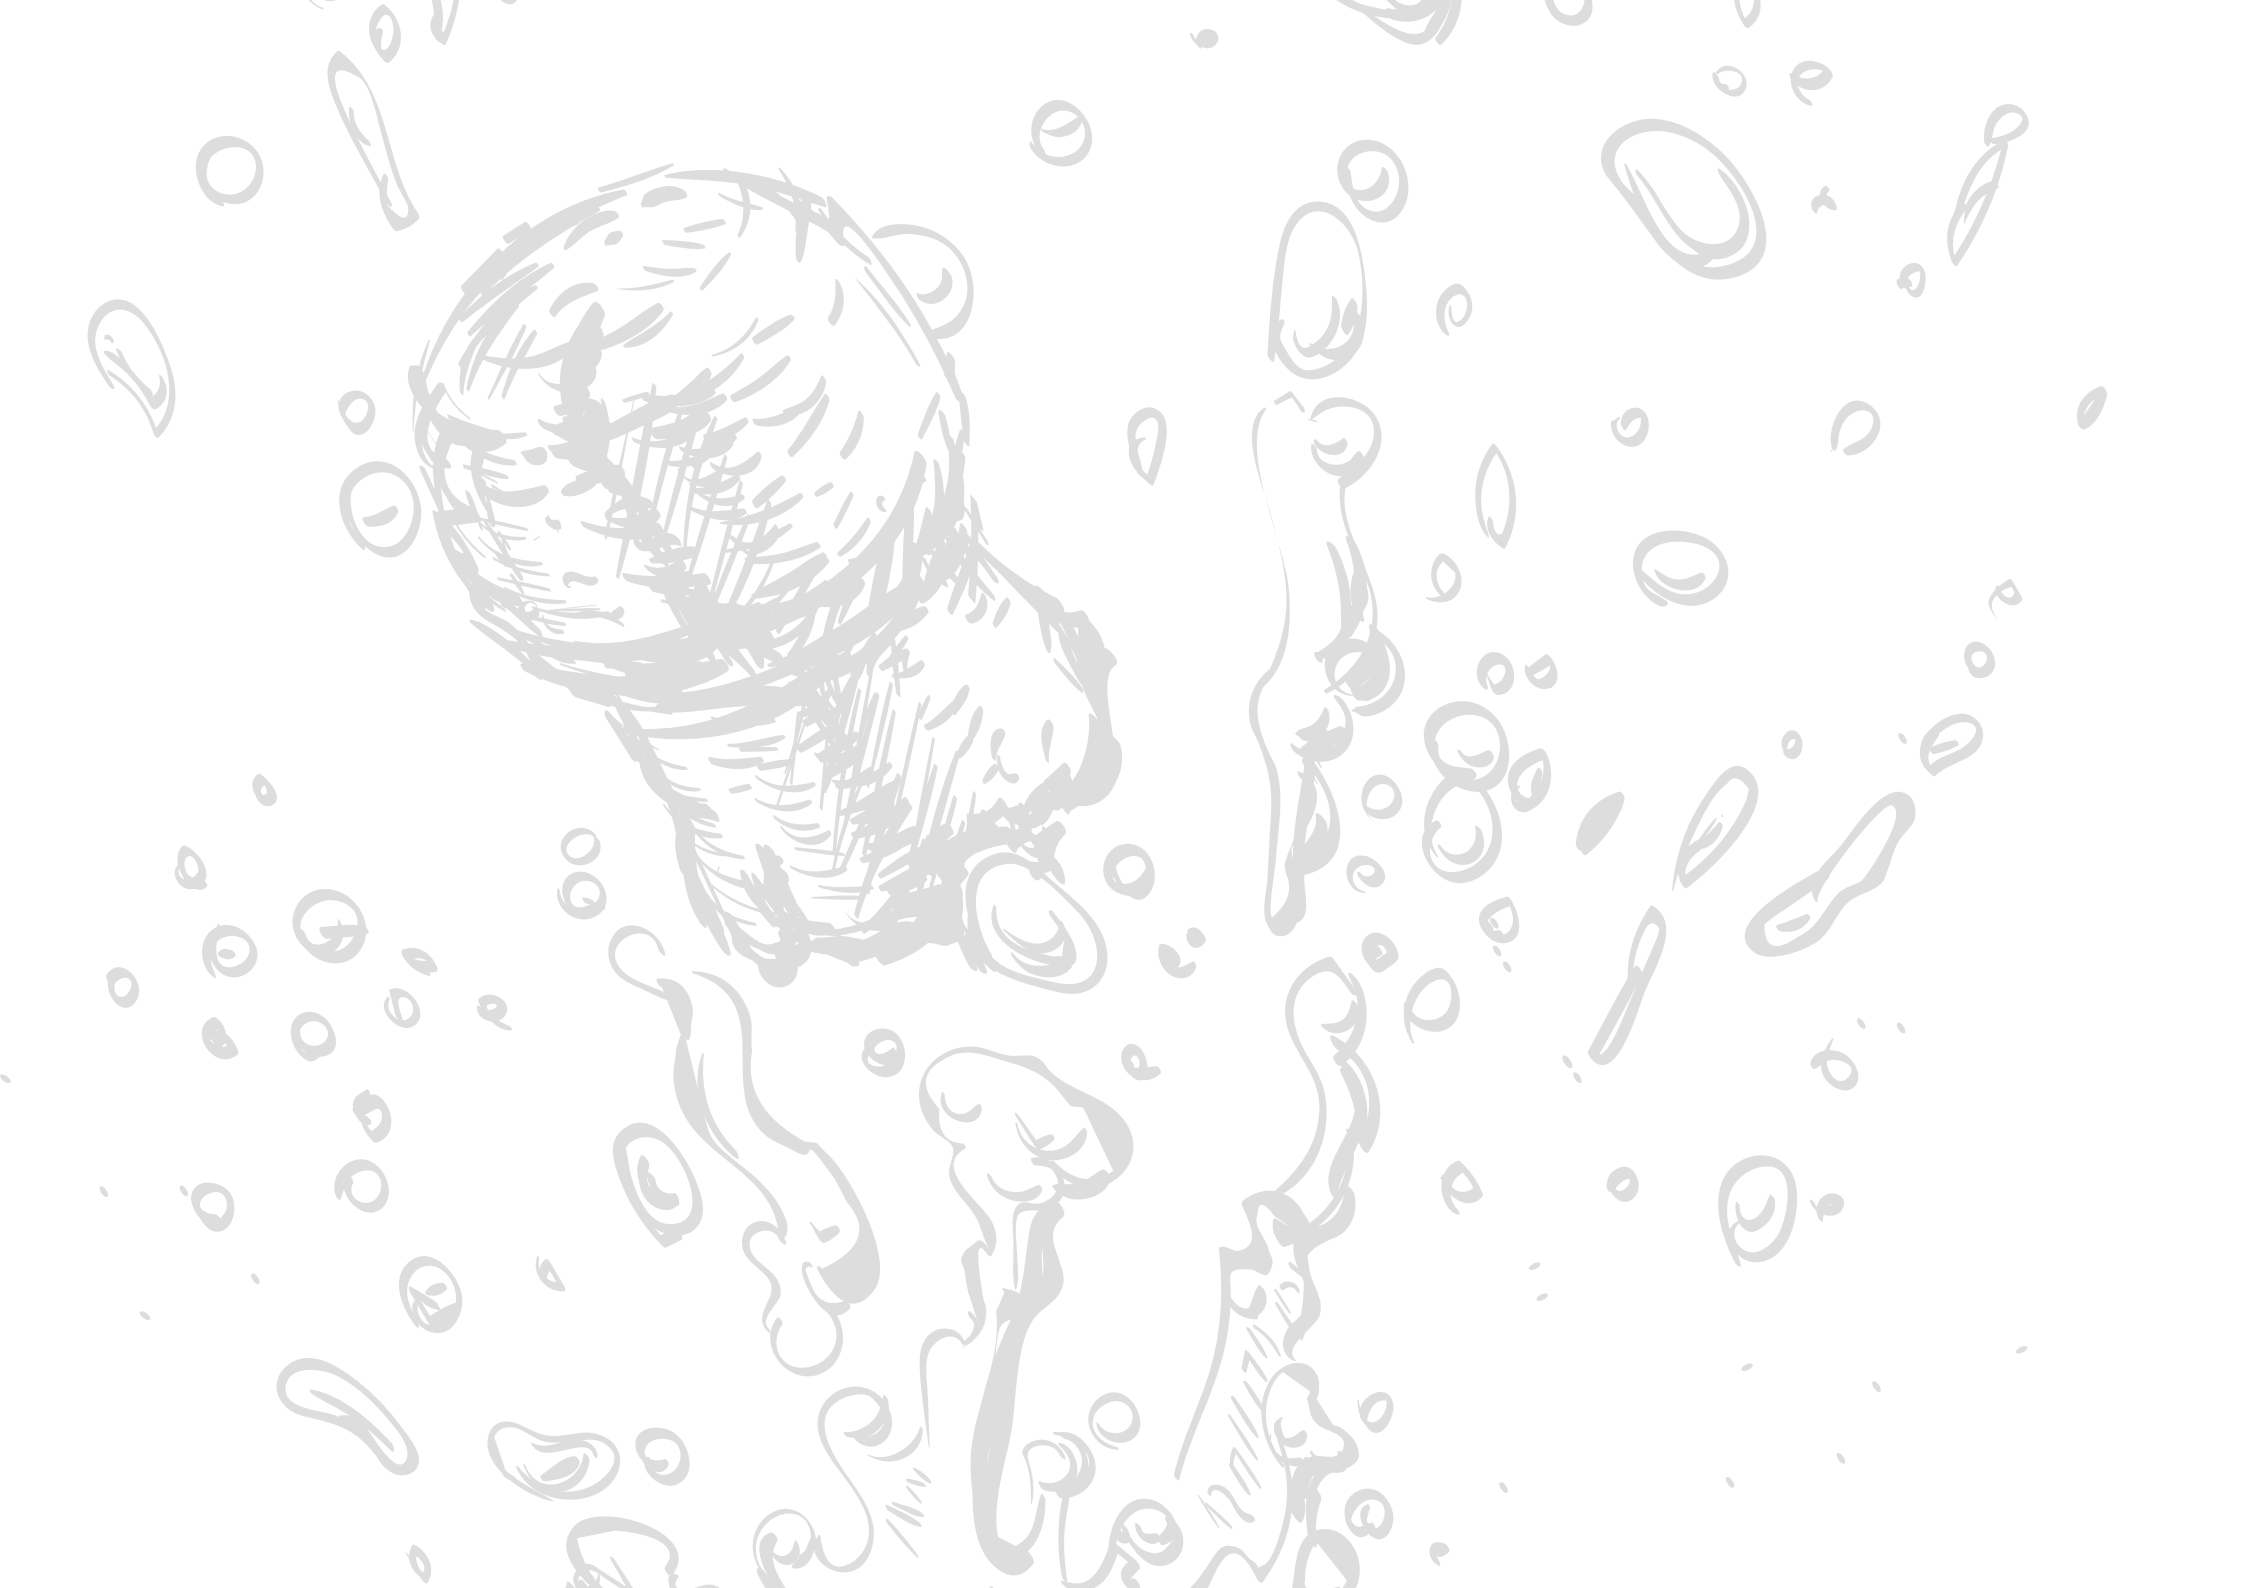

Rosé Wine

When rosé wine is the primary product, it is produced with the skin contact method. Black-skinned grapes are crushed and the skins remain in contact with the juice for a short period, typically one to three days. The must is then pressed and the skins are discarded rather than left in contact throughout fermentation (as with red wine making). The longer the skins are left in contact with the juice, the more intense the colour of the final wine.

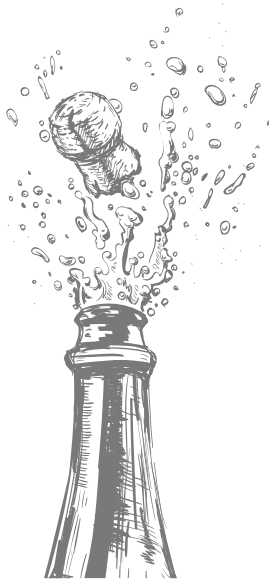

Rosé wine may be the oldest known type of wine, as it is the most straightforward to make with the skin contact method. The simple mixing of red wine into white wine to impart colour is highly discouraged in most wine growing regions, especially in France, where it is forbidden by law, except for Champagne.

ENGLISH FIZZ & CHAMPAGNE

125ml | Bottle

The internal pressure of a champagne bottle is around 90psi, nearly three times the amount in a car tyre. It is enough to launch it at 50 miles per hour as it leaves the bottle, which, it is estimated, could fire it over forty feet.

Méthode Champenoise

The traditional method by which Champagne is produced, and the method used by many English sparklers! After primary fermentation and bottling, a 2nd alcoholic fermentation occurs in the bottle. The fermentation is induced by adding several grams of yeast and rock sugar to the bottle 'dosage'. In Champagne, a minimum of 18 months is required for the 2nd fermentation. After aging, the bottle is manipulated, in a process called remuage, (or riddling) so the lees settle in the neck of the bottle.

After chilling the bottles, the neck is frozen, and the cap removed. The bottle is topped up and quickly corked.

Merlot & Blends

Merlot is one of the primary grapes used in Bordeaux wine, indeed it is the most widely planted grape in Bordeaux. It is also one of the most popular red wine varieties in many markets. While Merlot is made across the globe, there tend to be two main styles. The 'International style', (New World etc) tends to emphasise late harvesting to gain ripeness and produce inky, coloured wines that are full in body, high in alcohol and lush, velvety tannins with plum and blackberry fruit. The other is the 'Bordeaux style', which favours earlier harvesting to maintain acidity, lower alcohol levels, with fresh red fruit flavours.

Pinot Noir

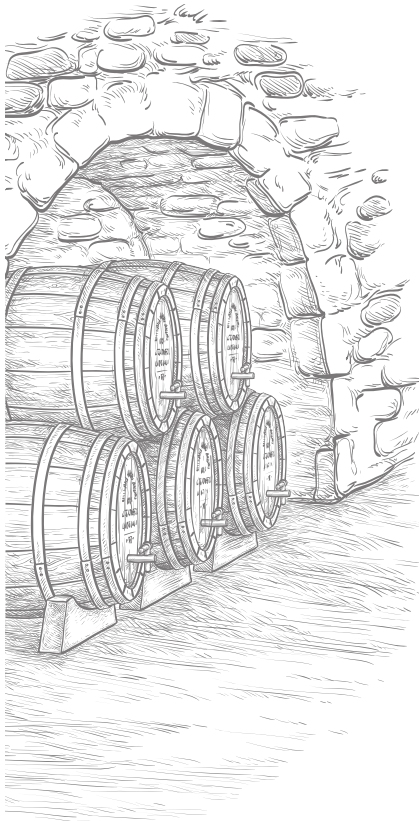

Pinot Noir is the red grape of Burgundy. It is very difficult to cultivate and is susceptible to numerous viticultural hazards. Perhaps this is why many wine makers consider it the 'holy grail' and want to make it. Remember it is brick red in colour, a good indicator in 'blind tastings'. It produces red fruit aromas of cherries, raspberries and strawberries.

Syrah, Shiraz, & Blends

Syrah also known as Shiraz is grown throughout the world! The style and flavour are influenced by the climate where the grapes are grown, with moderate climates, such as the Rhône Valley, tending to produce medium to full-bodied wines with medium to high tannins, notes of blackberry, mint and black pepper. Hot climates, like Australia, are much more full-bodied, softer tannins, jammy fruit and spice notes of liquorice, anise and leather. Can be a single varietal or part of a blend.

While a bottle's shape doesn't make a difference in terms of impacting the wine's flavour, the bottle chosen represents the history and tradition that reflects back to where the wine is made.

Sangiovese & Blends

In Italy, Sangiovese is the most widely planted red grape variety. Throughout Italy it is known under a variety of names including Brunello, Morellino, Nielluccio and others. Indeed it is the primary grape in Chianti, Vino Nobile di Montepulciano and many 'super tuscans'. The intense fruit and deep colour of Cabernet was shown to be well suited for blending with Sangiovese but banned in many Italian DOCs.

Hence the rise of the 'Super Tuscans'.

Natural wine corks are derived from the bark of cork oak trees.

The bark is carefully peeled away and cut into sheets before processing. The oak trees are not cut down, and only about half of its bark is removed at any time.

There are 4 simple aspects of a wine to consider when deciding if the wine is of good quality:

1: Smell

2: Balance. When a wine is in balance, none of the components of acidity, tannin, alcohol, or fruit stand out as the main event.

3: Depth.

4: Finish.

Never was fruit treated with such care and made so interesting!

Negroamaro & Blends

Negroamaro, meaning 'black and bitter' is a red wine grape variety native to southern Italy. It is grown almost exclusively in Apulia and particularly in Salento, the peninsula which can be visualised as the 'heel' of Italy.

Wines tend to be very rustic in character, combining perfume with earthy bitterness.

Red berry fruit flavours like raspberry predominate in wines from cooler areas, whereas blackberry, anise and pepper notes are more common in wines made in warmer areas.

The indentation on the bottom of wine bottles is called a punt. It is common in sparkling wine bottles because it strengthens the glass against the pressure of the wine. In still wine, it simply makes the bottle look bigger and therefore more expensive. The truth is that the bottom of the bottle has no bearing on the quality of what's inside.

Malbec

Known as Auxerrois in Cahors, Cot in the Loire and Malbeck in Argentina, the grape has undergone a mini renaissance in the last decade, largely fuelled by its success in South America. It used to be a staple in Bordeaux blends, but never recovered fully from the 1956 frosts and its plantings have fallen by 75% ! It is still grown successfully in South West France where its most famous wine is Cahors. This wine used to be as black as coal and tough as leather but improvements in viticulture have led to riper, softer, more approachable wines that are among the best in the region. In Argentina it is widely grown and produces deep, coloured wines with generous black fruit characteristics, balanced acidity and smooth tannins.
