The Essence of Wine & Hospitality

My love for food and wine started from a young age as I was only 14 when I got my first job helping my best friend in his restaurant near the ancient city of Pompei. At this stage, I was not working for money but more because I loved the atmosphere of the dining room, the conversations from the guests, the clicking of glasses and cutlery. I also discovered that I loved providing people with something that they enjoy and realised that in turn, it gave me real gratification and a good feeling inside. It was that summer that I fell in love with the hospitality industry!

I wanted to learn more, so I went to a hotel and management college near the stunning Amalfi Coast, where I developed my knowledge and skills in food, beverage, nutrition, and silver service. I graduated and moved to London. With not much money or English, I knew this was going to be a risk, but I was determined and excited for the future.

My adventure in Britain started in a village just outside London. I worked for a small Italian restaurant where I developed my English and studied the English dining culture. Once more confident in my level of English, I moved into London and worked in a few successful private member clubs and restaurants in the West End. I started building my career and loved the vibrancy of living and working in the London hospitality scene. My first management role came when I joined the team at The London Hippodrome.

Salvo Russo

Wine has always been part of my life! As an Italian boy, I was exposed to the culture of wine from a young age. Wine was on the table during every meal since I can remember and was part of our family celebrations. I always loved wine, but when I was accepted onto a course with the Wine and Spirits Education Trust, my passion for wine was able to significantly progress professionally.

I have now qualified at all levels with the Wine and Spirits Education Trust, and I have also recently passed the Wine Educator course. Through my years of wine training, I have been able to travel to the most spectacular wine regions of the world. I absorbed all I could from the wonderful people I met, the wonders I have seen, and from every wine I tasted.

I am currently the Hospitality General Manager and Head of Wine at The London Hippodrome, and Wine Educator for the Wine and Spirits Education Trust.
