THE FIVE TASTES

In the West, Aristotle postulated in c. 350 BCE that the two most basic tastes were sweet and bitter.

Ayurveda, an ancient Indian healing science, had its own tradition of basic tastes, comprising sweet, salty, sour, pungent, bitter and astringent. Similarly, the ancient Chinese regarded spiciness as a basic taste.

As of the early twentieth century, physiologists and psychologists believed there were four basic tastes: sweetness, sourness, saltiness and bitterness. At that time umami was not proposed as a fifth taste but now a large number of authorities recognise it as the fifth taste and so does The Rib Room Bar.

SWEET

What we perceive as sweetness is usually caused by sugar which is derived from fructose or lactose.

The Rambler

Finlandia vodka, Chase raspberry liqueur, vanilla, mixed berries and soda.
A taste of rambling in the countryside.

£15

THE RIB ROOM GIN & BITTERS EXPERIENCE

Bitters (noun): a liquid, often an alcoholic liquor, in which bitter herbs or roots have steeped, used as a flavouring especially in mixed drinks or as a tonic. The original definition of a cocktail dating back to 1806 stipulates that it should contain a spirit, water, sugar and bitters. Since then, bitters have been an essential component in some of the world's finest cocktails and, here at The Rib Room, we have created a bespoke handcrafted bitters experience to be blended with your choice of premium gins and fever tree tonic.
